Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Highways and Hedges: Or, Fifty Years of Western Methodism The time was when the publication of a book was a notable event, and only men of great ability were expected to become authors. Now, however, the facilities for book-making are so multiplied, and the popular taste for reading so developed, that the annual crop of books is looked for with as much regularity as the crop of corn. But as in agriculture, so in book-making, the fondest hopes are sometimes cut short by an untimely frost. It has been said by some one that an author, like a fat man in a crowd, must elbow others out of the way to make room for himself. Not being a fat man, and now within four years of four-score, I can not jostle much with others in the crowd.
