The field is so vast and the possibilities so unlimited that we do not at present know enough even to ask intelligent questions regarding a thousand and one problems that will be formulated only by those trained in both the biological and physical sciences. And in whatever line such men may specialize they will find themselves materially helped by a general knowledge of the forest resources from which their raw material comes, of the methods by which these resources may be perpetuated, and of their place not only in individual industries but in the life of the nation as a whole. The point of view which embraces the forest as well as its products constitutes an asset not to be ignored. The need for men of this type is as real in a wide variety of business positions as in public service. As one forester now in industrial work has expressed it: The course should aim not only to prepare men for the forest products laboratory and other research but for lumber-sales engineers, creosote wood sales engineers, chemists in the employ of lumber associations, technical-service engineers, wood-using equipment installations and sales engineers, and the many other lines of work in which a technical knowledge of wood and forestry is of basic value. The field for such specialists has hardly been...
