Not illustrated. 1903 Excerpt: .strike, which occurred in December, 1893, extending into 1894, the Amreican Railway TJnion strike on the Great Northern Railroad in April of the latter year, and some others, emphasize the statement. The latest of what may be called historic strikes are those of the anthracite coal regions and the bituminous coal strikes of 1895, 1897, 1900 and the so-called steel strike of the year 1901. The latter was a contest between-the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers and the United States Steel Corporation. It began on the 1st of July, 1901, and lasted until the 15th of September, when work was resumed in accordance with an adjustment agreed to on the 13th of the latter month. The diffi culty grew out of an attempt to adjust a sliding scale of wages with some of the constituent companies of the United States Steel Corporation, a new company, having $1,404,000,000 capitalization, which was perfected after the difficulty really began. The real nut of the difficulty was not a question of wages, hours of labor or rules or conditions of work, but a contest for recognition of the association to demand the unionizing of mills, a demand, of course, which was positively refused by the United States Steel Corporation. It was the first great struggle in the United States that was conducted solely on this issue, which, indeed, has been contested many times, but usually in conjunction with some grievance or complicated with some demand as to...
